ABOUT THE CONFERENCE
NNEDV will host its 4th Annual Economic Justice Summit from June 2 – 4, 2020. As part of our ongoing work to highlight and address the intersection of domestic violence and economic security, this national, two-day Summit will bring together advocates, state domestic violence coalitions, national experts, and allies to discuss and share strategies to improve economic security for domestic violence survivors. The Summit will feature speakers, panel discussions and workshops on a range of topics. Our goals for the Summit are to provide a space to examine the systems that inform economic justice work; share concrete and innovative tools; to identify emerging issues including national and local policy solutions; and to strengthen partnerships between the movement to end domestic violence and anti-poverty movement.

Proposals must include:
- Session title
- Session description or abstract
- Relevant bio and/or CV for all presenters (if chosen)
- Specification of session format (i.e. panel or workshop)
- Technology or other materials that NNEDV will need to provide for your presentation (i.e. flipchart, speakers, printed documents, etc.)
- Presenter contact information

Topic Areas and Learning Objectives
Economic security is a key component to safety and survival. Economic justice means advocates, policy makers, organizations and institutions work together to eliminate barriers to access resources so survivors can strengthen their short-term safety and long-term security. Economic justice is incumbent on including all people in building a safe and secure future. Economic justice also means that advocates, programs, coalitions, and community partners are working together to build infrastructure to support access to resources and barrier reduction to financial security for those in the movement.

Conference sessions will be designed to provide attendees with activities, materials, and knowledge to foster involvement within the domestic violence and economic justice fields. We are looking for innovations and strategies that can be applied in multiple circumstances or points of intervention for diverse audiences and communities. A significant number of participants should represent organizations at the local program level working directly with advocates and survivors.

This year’s Summit will have a focus on education and job training; therefore priority consideration will be given to proposals that address and/or include them. We are interested in highlighting innovative partnerships, program expansion opportunities and intersections related to IPV and pursuit of education and job training.

Topics may fall within the following areas:
- Education
- Job Training and Job Readiness for survivors entering or reentering the workforce
- U Visas and T Visas
- Workplace protections; employer education; unemployment protection;
- Collaboration with community development and economic planning
- Fintech (Financial Technology)
- Safety and Opportunities in the gig economy
- Personal Banking and finance
- Accessible services for survivors across all generations, accessibility, etc.
- Access to housing, housing resources and housing justice
- Consumer protection and consumer advocacy
